The Willis Tower
is getting demoted

One World Trade Center,
New York
E. JASON WAMBSGANS/TRIBUNE

Willis Tower,
Chicago
BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE

Chicago Tribune

One World Trade Center will be the nation's tallest building when it opens next year, a Chicago-based tall buildings council announced Tuesday—a decision that drew a quick rebuke from Mayor Emanuel.

The decision by the Council on Tall Buildings and Urban Habitat hinged on whether the tower's mast was a spire, which counts in height measurements, or an antenna, which doesn't.

"Even though the cladding was taken off the spire, you can still see that it is an architectural element," said Antony Wood, executive director of the council. "It is not just a plain steel mast from which to hang antenna or satellite dishes."

Emanuel forcefully disagreed, defending the supremacy of Chicago's skyline.

"I just saw the decision," the mayor said. "And I would just say to all the experts gathered in one room, if it looks like an antenna, acts like an antennae, then guess what? It is an antenna. That's No. 1.

"No. 2," he continued, "I think [with] the Willis Tower you will have a view that's unprecedented in its beauty, its landscape and its capacity to capture something. Something you can't do from an antenna. Not that I'm competitive. So for all those who want to climb on top of an antenna and take a look, go ahead. I would suggest stay indoors and take a look."

But the council ruled that One World Trade Center's mast is a spire because it will be a permanent feature, its height locked in at a symbolic 1,776 feet. That distinguishes the mast from an ordinary antenna, like the one atop Willis, whose height can be changed.

"We know that it is a permanent feature because of the sacrosanct nature of the 1,776 height," Wood said. "The key word is permanence."

Why 1,776 feet?

One World Trade Center's height, which architect Daniel Libeskind proposed in his competition-winning master plan for ground zero, was meant to symbolize the year the Declaration of Independence was adopted and American resolve in the face of the 9/11 terrorist attacks.

After the news that One World Trade Center officially will be named the tallest building in the Western Hemisphere, Chicagoans spoke out about the perceived slight in high volumes Tuesday on social media. Some were decrying yet another crown jewel being taken away from our city, but there's no reason to be upset. In case you forgot, here are six things Chicago does better than New York.

ON A ROLL

NEARLY 6 MONTHS IN, DIVVY IS RACKING UP MILES AND ADDING STATIONS

By Mick Swasko | REDEYE

There are no signs or banners on this nondescript industrial warehouse in West Town to indicate that the 18,000-square-foot structure is headquarters for what could soon become the largest commuter cycling system in the country.

"It's intentional," Divvy Deputy General Manager Elliot Greenberger said. "We're off the radar."

Light blue paint is still fresh on the walls at the command center for Divvy, the bike-sharing program the city launched five months ago. Much of the office furniture consists of folding tables and chairs. As you enter the warehouse where the fleet is brought in for service, you pass an otherwise empty corner where the company's promotional bike, painted red to stand out from the sea of blue-tinted cycles, is parked. The program is owned by Portland, Ore.-based Alta Bicycle Share.

In front of dozens of tagged bikes waiting for service, a group of Divvy technicians works to replace tubes, tires and pedals. Near the ceiling, a giant Lollapalooza lineup hangs over the two-story warehouse, a remnant of a video production company that was the building's previous tenant. Outside, Divvy rebalancing trucks come and go, hauling away as many as 28 bikes at a time to put back into the system.

Things are constantly moving at Divvy, just as Chicago is poised to shed its Second City title when it comes to bikes.

The program is on track to become the largest bike-sharing system in North America next year, according to the Chicago Department of Transportation, expanding from 330 stations to 475 throughout the city. With that, it would surge ahead of current No. 1 Montreal (434) and No. 2 New York (331). With additional grant funding, the suburbs of Evanston and Oak Park could see their first glimpses of the light-blue bikes in 2014.

Greenberger said he does expect a slowdown as ice and snow make their way into Chicago this winter. But it doesn't mean Divvy won't be busy. In fewer than six months, riders have traveled more than 1.5 million miles in just fewer than 650,000 trips in the system of about 5,000 bikes. As the total number of stations is expected to climb next year, Greenberger expects numbers will continue to climb, especially if history is any indication.

"We were seeing as many as four to five trips per day [during the summer]," he said. "That's a metric some cities take years to get to."

What does it take to keep Chicago riding? Greenberger opened the data to RedEye for a look at Divvy by the digits. The company plans to release anonymous, trip-by-trip data in a report by the end of the year.

Billy Goat Tavern owner Sam Sianis said he knew nothing of potential plans to move the Billy Goat's original location on Lower Michigan Avenue. The plans would displace the Billy Goat, if only temporarily. ANTHONY SOUFFLE/TRIBUNE

Gut the Billy Goat?

Landmark tavern caught in middle of redevelopment plan

Chicago Tribune

No Pepsi. No fries. No desire to change things.

The Billy Goat Tavern has been a Chicago landmark for generations and a fixture underneath North Michigan Avenue for almost 50 years. And its owner wants to remain there, regardless of whatever redevelopment goes on above it.

Sam Sianis, who runs the tavern and is the nephew of the Billy Goat's original owner, William Sianis, said Tuesday that he knew nothing of potential plans for a massive redevelopment disclosed Monday that would involve replacing the Realtor Building at 430 N. Michigan Ave. That project, on property located above the Goat, would at least temporarily displace the tavern from the subteranean location it has called home since 1964.

"I want to stay here," Sianis said. "I've been here for almost 50 years. Like the Realtors, I'm part of Michigan Avenue."

On Tuesday, patrons were at the well-worn tables and chairs as they always are, a mix of locals and tourists waiting for their orders and admiring the photos that line the walls.

"Nothing has changed since 1964," Sianis said. "Nothing has changed from the time we opened up to now."

Asked if he'd like a more modern, fancier new home as part of a new development, Sianis fell back on the cadence—No fries! Chips. No Pepsi! Coke—immortalized by John Belushi in the "Saturday Night Live" skit that made the place famous.

"No fancy," Sianis said. "I want it to be the same."

Staying put wouldn't be an option if the building above it is razed and redeveloped, but the National Association of Realtors thinks it has come up with the next best thing: Pick up the various pieces of the tavern, picture frame by picture frame and chair by chair, and move the Goat across the street.

BILLY GOAT 101

The Goat's role in Chicago as a well-known bar goes back generations. It has been a hangout for journalists for decades and earned headlines regularly through owner William Sianis, an impresario as well as bartender. He's the one who placed a hex on the Chicago Cubs in 1945 after his pet goat was kicked out of Wrigley Field during the World Series.

"The Wrigley Building has a basement area that would be a great transition," said Bill Armstrong, the Realtors' 2013 treasurer who has been involved in the redevelopment discussions. "It would be seamless. Sam's got to agree, but they would be positioning themselves in the same environment."

Sex complaint goes viral

By Mick Swasko

REDEYE

Two Chicago neighbors have taken their battle over sex noises to their front door, and the Internet is getting a front-row seat.

A photo posted to Reddit spells out (in very vivid detail and handwriting), a dispute between two neighbors with "very thin walls."

"I'd really appreciate not having to hear every trust (sic) and moan," the first note reads. A jab is then added about how said sexual intercourse never "lasts very long."

In a retort, the "girl in 317" explains in great detail that she's alone in the apartment, and what her angry neighbor is likely hearing is, uh, likely the use of an item from sex shop 'Taboo Tabou "down the street."

The post on Reddit had 1,300 comments Tuesday morning, many arguing over which note was more cringe-inducing.

What's next in Renisha McBride shooting case?

1 DEARBORN HEIGHTS, Mich. Michigan prosecutors in the Renisha McBride shooting case, which is becoming the latest example of questions about race and guns, are reviewing whether to charge a white man who fatally shot McBride, a black woman who was reportedly seeking help after a car accident.

McBride, 19, was shot to death Nov. 2 by a homeowner in Dearborn Heights. According to an autopsy released Monday, McBride was shot in the face.

Maria Miller, a spokeswoman, told the Los Angeles Times on Tuesday that the prosecutor's office is awaiting material from the Dearborn Heights Police Department before deciding whether to bring a charge.

"We have begun the warrant review process. News will be released when a charging decision has been made," Miller said.

There is no information when that decision will be made, she said.

Survivors of Typhoon Haiyan wait to board an aircraft Tuesday during the rescue of hundreds of people in Leyte, Philippines. GETTY IMAGES

Typhoon death toll estimate: 2,000

2 TACLOBAN, Philippines The death toll from Typhoon Haiyan's rampage through the Philippines is closer to 2,000 or 2,500 than the 10,000 previously estimated, President Benigno Aquino said Tuesday as U.S. and British warships headed toward his nation to help with relief efforts.

"Ten thousand, I think, is too much," Aquino told CNN in an interview. "There was emotional drama involved with that particular estimate."

Aquino said the government was still gathering information from various storm-struck areas and the death toll may rise.

"We're hoping to be able to contact something like 29 municipalities left wherein we still have to establish their numbers, especially for the missing, but so far 2,000, about 2,500, is the number we are working on as far as deaths are concerned," he said.

The official death toll stood at 1,774 on Tuesday.

Philippine officials have been overwhelmed by Haiyan, one of the strongest typhoons on record, which tore through the central Philippines on Friday and flattened Tacloban, the coastal capital of Leyte province where officials had feared 10,000 people died, many drowning in a tsunami-like wall of seawater.

Aquino revealed the lower estimated toll after the nuclear-powered aircraft carrier USS George Washington set sail for the Philippines carrying about 5,000 sailors and more than 80 aircraft to accelerate relief efforts. It was joined by four other U.S. Navy ships and should arrive in two to three days, the Pentagon said.

"The weather is pretty bad out there, so we are limited by seas and wind," Captain Thomas Disy, commander of the USS Anietam, a missile cruiser that is part of the carrier group, said in Hong Kong. "But we are going to be going as fast as we possibly can."

Court upholds Oklahoma abortion ruling

By refusing to hear the case, the high court left intact an Oklahoma Supreme Court ruling that struck down the law.

MAC SHOWDOWN
Northern Illinois (9-0) vs. Ball State (9-1)
7 p.m. Wednesday, ESPN2

N-I-WHO?

The underdog Huskies are way under the radar—even in their own state

By Matt Lindner | FOR REDEYE

They are the best college football team in the area that nobody is talking about, and Northern Illinois wide receiver Da'Ron Brown says he and his teammates are fine with that.

"We don't try to listen to outside noise," the 22-year-old redshirt junior said. For the second straight year, the dominant local program reigns about an hour west of the city, in DeKalb. If the 15th-ranked Huskies (9-0) win out, they likely will head to their second consecutive BCS bowl game.

Chances are if you've heard anything about the Huskies, it's been about star quarterback Jordan Lynch, the team's Heisman Trophy candidate quarterback.

But much like another famous Jordan in Chicago before him, Lynch can't do it by himself. So who are these guys in his supporting cast?

MATT LINDNER IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

THE LOCAL TALENT

Jordan Lynch gets the headlines, but Da'Ron Brown has helped him put up some of his gaudiest numbers.

The Morgan Park product is enjoying a breakout campaign, catching seven of Lynch's 19 touchdown passes and setting career highs in every major statistical category.

The junior said success comes from being on the same page as his quarterback.

"Preparation in practice," he said, "it's just becoming confident in each other and letting each other know that each other is going to do each other's job."

Now in his fourth year with the Huskies, Brown has seen the program go from mere conference power to a force to be reckoned with nationally.

Brown also has noticed a change in the way the program is perceived back at home and with potential recruits.

"People are seeing a successful environment and people want to be part of success," he said.

Da'Ron Brown

THE FLORIDA KID

When Lauderdale, Fla., native Ken Bishop told his friends and family he was going to Northern Illinois to play football, there were a lot of questions.

"The first thing they asked was 'where is that?'" the 23-year-old said. That changed following the team's run to the Orange Bowl last season. Now, the conversations Bishop has when he goes home are a lot different.

The 6-foot-1, 308-pound defensive tackle earned Mid-American Conference West Division Defensive Player of the Week honors last week after making a career-high nine tackles and grabbing his first career interception.

The junior college transfer said that as wins have piled up, so too has the fame around campus.

"We definitely get a lot more recognition," he said. "Students, teachers, professors, it's good, we get a lot of love."

Perez Ford
GETTY IMAGES/FILE PHOTOS

THE UP-AND-COMER

If Perez Ford and his fellow defensive linemen seem like overgrown children horsing around in the backyard while out on the field, that's because, well, they are.

"We actually pride ourselves on being laid back, holding our composure, not overthinking, just being like kids playing backyard football," he said. "We just want to go out there and play."

Offense sells tickets and makes the highlight reels, but the Huskies' defense has kept them in every game this season.

"We talk a lot of trash to each other and that's what keeps us motivated," the 19-year-old sophomore said. "All you hear all game is your teammate who is lining up next to you telling you I'm gonna race you to the quarterback, I'm gonna get this sack before you. You don't wanna be outshined by your teammate so you go out there and you try your hardest."

It's a game the defensive end is dominating. The Romeoville product leads the team in sacks (3.5) and tackles for loss (six).

Jordan Lynch

STRIKE THE POSE

You may have noticed that Northern Illinois quarterback Jordan Lynch is good. Like, Heisman Trophy-good. Here are some of the Chicago native's most impressive stats from this season and where they rank nationally.

Touchdowns: 32 (third) Total yards per game: 335.7 (ninth)
Total rushing yards: 1,150 (seventh)

1	When the Bears say Jay Cutler is "week to week," what does that really mean?	It really means "weak to weak."	He knows as much as we do at this point (SPOILER ALERT: that's a bad thing.)	They mean he's weak—too weak to be a top quarterback in the NFL. Get it?	Jay haters probably say the Bears meant "way too weak."	This season is looking more and more bleak.
2	The Bears have so many defensive injuries it's almost offensive.	... that I just got recruited to play strong safety. I got a pick-six in freshman year football, you know.	... the only place opposing quarterbacks will see a sack is at White Castle.	... it's becoming offensive.	... their body parts go out more than they do.
3	How would you describe Marc Trestman's decision-making?	Blinded by charm. Like K-Cav, he left Cutler in too long.	Diplomatic. I would say "Canadian" but, you know ... that whole crack thing.	I just watched "Cloudy with a Chance of Meatballs" with my niece. That nails it.	As long as he's not burning timeouts Lovie style, I'm happy.	Better than Lovie Smith's, at least.
4	What can Northern Illinois football do to seize more of the spotlight?	Play a team that's not a directional Michigan. Still, give 'em a hand.	Never play the UNDEFEATED FLORIDA STATE SEMINOLES in a BCS game again. (Also, join the Big Ten.)	Share your experiences on registering for Obamacare with the media.	Move to Alabama and get to Crimson Tide off campus? Or, you know, win a game against a couple of Top 10 teams.	Change their name to Notre Illinois.
5	Tim Tebow may become a college football broadcaster. Good idea?	Any day I can see Tim Tebow in my box is a good day.	I can see it now. "DUH, he threw the ball far because GAWD told him to throw it far durnrrr Gators Hyuk Hyuk."	Good idea. College was the only place he was relevant or any good.	Anything that keeps the nation talking about Tim Tebow for no real reason is a good idea in my book.	Sure. So long as he doesn't confuse "play by play" with "pray by pray."

ANTHONY SOUFFLE/TRIBUNE

No deal for you, Jay

Scott Bolohan

» @scottbolohan

Jay Cutler's career with the Bears has been full of twists and turns. Unfortunately, most of those involve body parts.

The "signature" moment of Cutler's Bears career was shivering on the sidelines during the NFC championship game, leading everyone to question his toughness and leadership (you know you did).

Which makes Sunday a strange reversal in potentially one of Cutler's last Bears games when fans wanted him out of the game earlier.

Since the NFC title game, Cutler has gone out of his way to prove his toughness. He's almost certainly taken more of a beating than any quarterback in the NFL, playing Sunday on a high ankle sprain and injured groin before finally being replaced by Josh McCown.

And yet Cutler on the sideline is his defining image as a Bear. He's left six of the past 24 games he's started with an injury. He's missed nine games completely in his Bears career, his roth coming next week, and then who knows how many more; a high ankle sprain generally takes four to six weeks to heal.

Cutler is certainly "tough." But Cutler is certainly injured a lot.

The Bears are barely hanging on to relevancy this year, and losing Cutler and Charles Tillman pretty much seals their fate for the year. So it might be time to think about the big question hanging over the season: Whether to bring back Cutler next year. Seeing as he got injured again Sunday, it should make the decision easy.

It would be hard to justify paying $15 million or more a year to a guy you can't count on playing every week, regardless if he's been not a complete abomination at quarterback and making him the best in franchise history. With a historically deep quarterback class in the draft next year, a rookie QB would have receivers in Brandon Marshall and Alshon Jeffery to work with and an offensive-minded coach to flourish under.

The Bears would finally be admitting they aren't Super Bowl contenders by not bringing back Cutler—but going in a different direction wouldn't hurt.

SCOTT BOLOHAN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

'WE WANT PEOPLE TO NOT GIVE A [BLEEP]'

What do EDM stars Krewella want? Free, uninhibited, sweaty fans

By Matt Pais | REDEYE SOUND BOARD

If you're a 21st century Chicago artist and your name isn't Kanye, Common, Lupe or Fall Out Boy, your album doesn't debut in the Billboard Top 10. Sadly, it just doesn't happen.

The exciting exception is EDM trio and north suburban Northbrook-bred Krewella, whose debut full-length "Get Wet," anchored by massive singles "Live for the Night" and "Alive," launched at No. 8 when the album dropped in September. Jahan Yousaf, who shares vocal duties in the group with her younger sister Yasmine, says they didn't celebrate that achievement—selling out shows she likens to action movies means more to her than charts and numbers—but they'll definitely celebrate after the tour-capping hometown show Saturday at Aragon, a venue few local acts have the audience to play.

From New York, Yousaf—who moved to L.A. earlier this year and declines to confirm her reported age of 24, saying, "When I turned 21 I actually told myself that every single year I'm going to keep turning 21"—talked about achieving a "teenage dream," crowds too intoxicated to pay attention and guys touting an unexpected slogan.

How much should people train for your show? It seems a certain level of endurance may be needed.

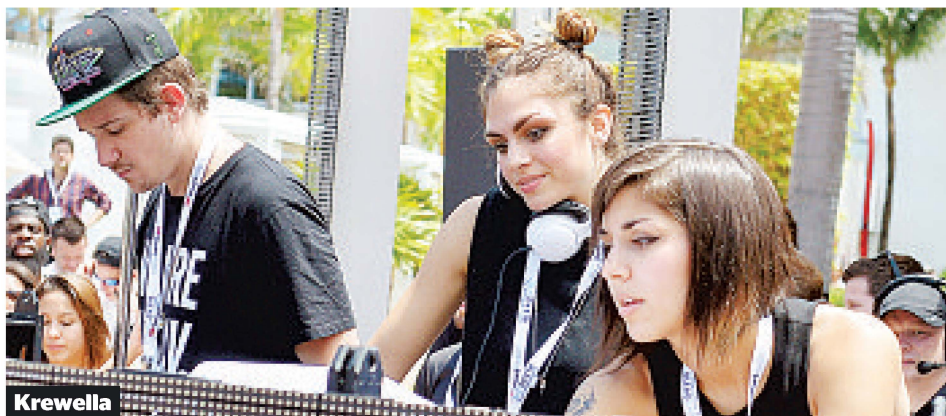

You don't have to train at all. In fact, it's about liberating yourself. It's about letting go. It's about not preparing. Prepare with water, obviously. We encourage people to not get dressed up and not wear heels and not try to look good at our shows. Because you can't have a good time if in the back of your mind you're always thinking about how pretty you look or if you're trying to stay away from sweaty people.

Have you ever looked into the crowd and seen that one person who got super-dressed up and was trying not to get soaked, and then something happens and it drenches them or gets them dirty?

I try to look at everyone in the crowd when we play. ... It's just adults, the older couples that stay toward the back in the balconies. People that are on dates together, which I don't even know 'cause that's not really a hot date or a romantic date, going to a Krewella concert. Unless you're down to get weird with your date. In the front rows, everyone is just crazy.

What does it mean to you to headline a local venue the size of Aragon?

It's so crazy because I just remember being a kid and I'd be listening to 94.7, which doesn't even exist anymore, but that was like the last metal station and I'd hear all my favorite bands: "Now playing at Aragon on July 21," or whatever day it was. ... It's so crazy; it feels like a teenage dream now that we're playing there.

There's obviously an association between EDM and drug use at shows. You guys have been outspoken about not doing hard drugs and the importance of safety. Is that something you emphasize live as well?

We party. We love to party. But I don't do hard drugs. None of us do. I know it's happening; I'm not stupid. I know it's happening at our shows, and I can see it. We're part of a scene where people are doing that, but I'm not anyone's mother. Our shows are 18 and over, and I'm not there to preach. I think it's important that people are responsible. They have to make the decisions themselves.

Is there any frustration when you're trying to set yourselves apart lyrically and musically but the chances of people paying attention to anything when totally out of their minds is slim?

Yeah. It's frustrating sometimes when we perform for a crowd that's really [bleeped] up, and we'll be pouring our hearts out on stage and I'll look in the front row and I always try to make eye contact with people, and they won't even be able to look me in the eye. Their eyes are rolling in the back of their heads; it's almost scary.

I suspect the album title may have prompted a new and rather transparent pick-up line.

"Do you want to get wet?" That would be cool if in five years people just started saying, "Yo, bro, let's get wet tonight." I would love that.

Guys saying that to each other?

That's the weird thing, and that's actually amazing to know that guys can start saying that. They're wearing "Get wet" shirts; they're holding signs that say, "Make me wet." It's originally something women say; women get their [bleeps] wet. Let's just be real. But I love to know that guys can let down this guard that they have of being so masculine and they can sing songs of ours. We're girls singing. They're very feminine lyrics sometimes and very sexual lyrics, but I see guys in the front row singing along and that makes me happy to know that they're not trying to be masculine and they don't feel too girly. They just don't care. And that's all we want at our shows. We want people to not give a [bleep]. We want people to feel liberated.

Peking duck
ADEL UNBE/TIMOTHY FILE

By Michael Nigrant | FOREWORD

"My friends are all drug dealers," deadpanned Kelly Cheng, co-owner of the Chinese restaurant Sun Wah BBQ in Uptown, when I ask her why, after getting an MBA at DePaul, she decided to join the family business. She said many of her peers were pharmacists and doctors, but that those friends never had flexibility in their daily lives—but she could, by working with her family at the restaurant.

Kelly wasn't the only one of her siblings to heed the siren call of carrying on the work of her father and mother, Eric and Linda Cheng. Brother Mike oversees the Chinese barbecue and sister Laura is a Kendall College graduate who spent some time in gourmet catering and restaurant kitchens, but now sources high-quality ingredients and ensures consistent cooking technique. Kelly said, "We're all here, I think, in some way for our love of food. But there wasn't an obligation ... it certainly wasn't the draw of working with family. Sometimes we want to kill each other, dig a hole and say, 'Bye!'" She added, "More than anything, we saw the hard work of our parents and we didn't want that go to waste."

Their father Eric grew up an hour north-east of Hong Kong and learned to cook from his father. When Kelly was born, he opened a small counter space in New York (the original Sun Wah), but rent and competition drove him to Chicago. He checked out Chinatown, but didn't like all the competition. He then ate at a restaurant near Argyle Street where he found so-so food and a crotchety owner who yelled at his staff. He chose a nearby building to open the next incarnation of Sun

SUN WAH BBQ

5039 N. Broadway 773-769-1254

Looks like: A bustling Hong Kong diner
Smells like: Star anise, ginger and fry oil
Sounds like: On weekends, the red brick walls reverberate with roaring conversation. It feels a little like the Chinese version of a German beer hall.

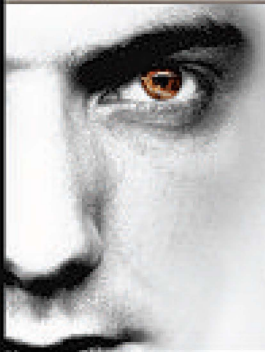

Wah, telling his family that because they were only half as rude and cooked better food, they'd surely be successful there.

Cheng overplayed his family's rudeness. His daughters are a welcoming sister act that makes you feel like you're eating at their family table. Kelly and Laura crack jokes at each other's expense, providing endless entertainment. The Cheng sisters also brought a new sensibility to the business. In 2008, they helped introduce a Beijing/Peking duck meal ($37) that easily feeds two to three people and is second to none. Unlike restaurants that pre-cook ducks and then reheat to order, Sun Wah's ducks are cooked to order and carved tableside. The four-course meal—which includes a crackly-skinned maltose-glazed Culver duck from Indiana brined in garlic and bean paste and seasoned with MSG and a secret family five-spice mixture, pillowy steamed bao buns, tangy pickled vegetables, fried rice, duck soup (made from the bones left from the carved duck) and a homemade ginger tofu dessert—is one of the best deals in town. Pro tip: Order the duck service a day, or at least a few hours, ahead via phone. It'll save you the additional 45-minute cooking time wait.

‘Big Lebowski’ inspires new Pipeworks beer

By Kate Bernot | REDEYE

The beer nerds abide. Chicago-based Pipeworks Brewing Company, which has quickly become synonymous with small-batch, outside-the-box beer styles, continues that tradition with a white Russian imperial milk stout called Hey, Careful Man, There’s a Beverage Here.

The beer, whose name is an homage to cult movie “The Big Lebowski,” debuted in early November and was a crowd favorite at last weekend’s Beer Hoptacular festival.

“We didn’t expect it to be as popular as it was,” said Mike Schallau, Pipeworks’ head of operations and director of barrel-aging. “What we like to do here is subvert expectations, as long as the beer’s delicious.”

Being fans of both wordplay and “The Big Lebowski,” the team at Pipeworks came up with the idea for a white Russian imperial stout, a play on classic Russian imperial stouts. The beer is light in color but with a big body and relatively high alcohol content. Pipeworks’ brewers added cocoa nibs, vanilla bean and coffee from Logan Square’s Ipsento to a base of barley, malt and lots of oats to create Hey, Careful Man, There’s a Beverage Here. The most important ingredient, though, may be the lacto sugar, a sugar derived from milk that stands in for the cream in a white Russian cocktail. Sweet, malty and surprisingly drinkable, the white Russian imperial stout certainly stood out from the pack at Beer Hoptacular.

“It works in that [festival] setting,” Schallau said. “You’re going to have 12 double IPAs, but you’re probably only going to have one white Russian imperial milk stout.” Hey, Careful Man, There’s a Beverage Here was distributed to liquor stores more than a week ago, and a few bottles may still be available on shelves. If you can’t get your hands on it now, Schallau promises that a barrel-aged version of the beer is in the pipeline. KBERNOT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEEATDRINK

Fun facts meet witty fictions at 'Just The FAQs'

By Julia Borcherts | FOR REDEYE

If you frequently ask yourself, "How can I bring more humor into my life?" then local comedians Steven Lyons (ComedySportz), Cody Melcher (100 Proof Comedy) and Bryan Bowden (Chicago Underground Comedy) have a solution for you.

Their shared affection for such British panel quiz shows as "QI," "Would I Lie to You?" and "Have I Got News for You" has resulted in "Just The FAQs," a comedy contest which combines trivia factoids and frequent liars. Lyons hosts the show, in which two teams—which are headed by Melcher and Bowden and feature special guests—attempt to discern the truth—or lack thereof—in the other team's trivia pronouncements.

The program has been in development since last summer and features audience interaction, short comedic "palate cleanser" interludes between rounds and on-stage conversational antics.

"The difference between the British panel show and the American game show that we wanted to focus on was the idea of letting it breathe and letting comedians or entertaining personalities have fun with each other," said Melcher.

To get in on the game ourselves, we asked Lyons to present Melcher and Bowden with questions relating to the show. We'll leave it to you to decide which responses are fact and which are fiction.

JUST THE FACTS ON THE 'JUST THE FAQS' CREATORS

Steven Lyons: A California-born, New Zealand-raised ensemble member of ComedySportz Chicago and New Zealand's Improv Bandits

Cody Melcher: Finalist in the National Queer Comedy Search, cast member of 100 Proof Comedy, senior writer for the "Talk Hard" live talk show and co-host of the Tomefoolery literary podcast

Bryan Bowden: Co-producer and cast member of Chicago Underground Comedy and instructor at The Second City Training Center

Steven Lyons: Bryan and Cody, a pleasure to have you on the page with me today. I've been asked to ask you some questions about "Just The FAQs." Firstly, what is the show?

Bryan Bowden: A show where comedians and entertainers get to play a game while being funny. The game consists of two teams of three panelists who present facts about an interest of theirs while the other team tries to figure out if they were presented with a truth or a lie.

Cody Melcher: The show is a cross between the sports of basketball and curling, but we've added a component of quiz questions to throw the contestants off-balance.

SL: Why do a British-style panel show in the Americas?

BB: Because recent demographic research has shown that the next big British trend in America will be panel shows. It goes Harry Potter, Doctor Who, panel shows.

CM: Because comedy isn't as regional as people think, especially in modern times with the Internet and technology bringing us all together. I was raised on [both] British and American comedy and I feel that happens even more today.

SL: How did "Just The FAQs" come about?

BB: I mentioned to Steven Lyons that I loved British panel shows and would love to try one in Chicago. Cody had also mentioned his undying love of panel shows to Steven before, and so we all met and created "Just The FAQs."

CM: An old wizard gave me a small monkey holding a large grapefruit and the rest is history.

SL: How long has "Just The FAQs" been running?

BB: Our first show is on Nov. 17, [but] it has been in production since the summer. We've been working on the concept [and] structure and did a dry-run practice [performance] because we really want to make sure it works as a show.

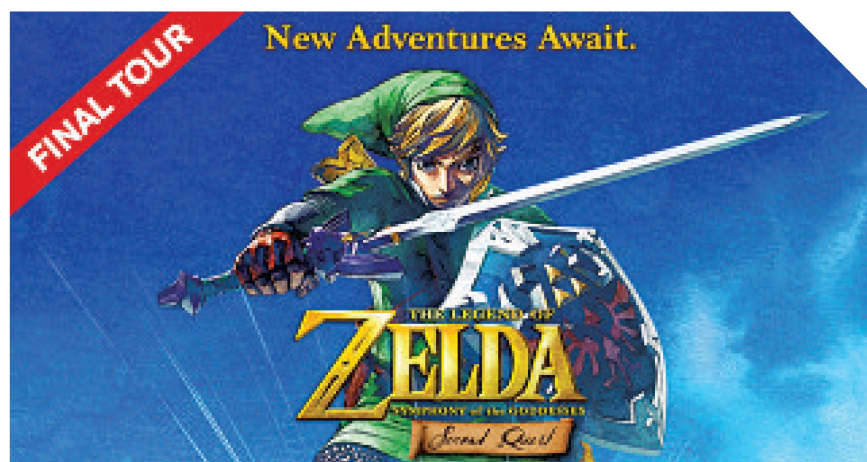

CM: We've been secretly doing the show since 2010, but last month we decided to finally allow audiences to see it. It's like we're opening our own Disney Vault.

SL: What will audiences see when they come to the show?

BB: A very fun and entertaining comedy show unlike any ever seen in Chicago.

CM: It depends on what hallucinogenics they take before the show.

THREE TO PLAY

BY RYAN SMITH FOR REDEYE

Battlefield 4 PlayStation 3, Xbox 360, PC, Wii U

!!! As an enormous fan of HBO's "The Wire," I was initially thrilled to see Michael K. Williams (who played Omar Little) co-starring in the campaign mode in "Battlefield 4." But in this overly bombastic single-player, anything resembling acting gets drowned out by the constant stream of shooting and explosions. The real draw of the game instead is the expansive multiplayer mode. It consistently delivers some of the biggest adrenaline-filled thrills in online gaming, from quickly jumping into a gunboat to race to an island under assault, to parachuting out of a helicopter piloted by a teammate to set C-4 explosives on an enemy tank.

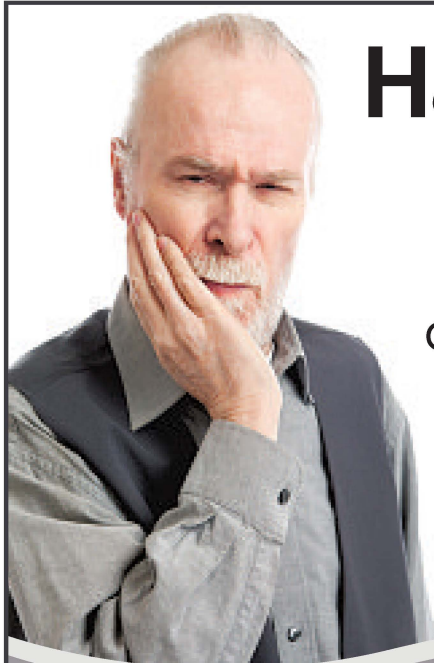

Wii Party U
Wii U

!!! Take the word "party" with a grain of salt. Unless you're under the age of 12, it's unlikely you'll play Nintendo's line of party games at any real shindig. Yet, if you can grab a couple of friends, there's still some lighthearted fun to be had with "Wii Party U." The best of the 80-plus minigames are ones that use the Wii U's unique touch-screen GamePad, such as a surprisingly engaging take on foosball and baseball and a Pictionary-inspired drawing game. There are plenty of misses to go along with the hits, but sometimes quantity manages to beat out quality.

Lego Marvel
Super Heroes
PC, PlayStation 3,
Xbox 360, Wii U

!!! Developer Traveller's Tales' mission to convert every significant pop-culture property into tiny, colorful block form continues with relative success in "Lego Marvel Super Heroes." This edition deeply excavates the entire Marvel comic universe—tossing in dozens of popular heroes like Iron Man and Thor alongside the most obscure characters (Captain Britain or Rocket Raccoon, anyone?). The action is charming, and the dialogue is often funny (especially when The Hulk tears down a wall and barks, "Hulk no like walls! They divide people!") but even superheroes apparently can't stop the evil of the game's technical glitches.

The Washington Post

The Thor sequel might bring one Dark World, but we're here to bring the illumination. What do we learn after seeing "Thor: The Dark World"—the follow-up that opened Friday? Besides realizing that "Phase 2" of the Marvel movies is very promising, we came away with a few observations about the second "Thor." Here they are, entirely free of spoilers.

1 Chris Hemsworth has grown into the superheroic clothes.

Given his work in "Thor" 2, Hemsworth deserves to be given his due. Robert Downey Jr.'s much-praised Iron Man performances might make him the alpha Avenger—as well as the highest paid—but Hemsworth cements his status: He can ably carry his own superhero franchise.

2 Natalie Portman is Marvel's reigning leading lady.

After it was announced that Patty Jenkins wouldn't helm the Thor sequel—she was ousted from the director's chair for Alan Taylor—Portman's return was rumored to be up in the air. Fortunately for "Thor" fans, Portman returned to shine again as Jane Foster.

3 Hemsworth and Portman are Marvel's top couple.

Marvel movies don't always pack the romance. In the "Captain America: The Winter Soldier" trailer, Cap says he has no time to date. The Hulk has emotional issues. What about Tony Stark and Pepper Potts? No, not even they can top Hemsworth's Thor and Portman's Jane. They capture lightning in a bottle and are a joy to watch as a couple.

4 There are some real laughs. (Great Odin's beard!)

In superhero films, the action sometimes muscles aside the laughs. Although there's action to spare in "Thor: The Dark World," there also are many funny moments—some of them quite surprising.

5 Double the pleasure.

Marvel movies, of course, deliver a scene after the credits. What you may not know is that there are two after-credits scenes in "The Dark World." Stick around and you'll see some big-time revelations that will connect a lot of dots as to the rest of Marvel's "Phase 2" and beyond.

THE WORLDWIDE BESTSELLER

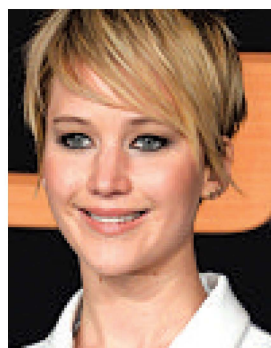

HOT DATE

Dec. 10

That's when the Victoria's Secret Fashion Show, which films Wednesday in New York, will air on CBS. Fall Out Boy and Taylor Swift were confirmed as performers Tuesday.

J-Law of the land

As if we needed any more evidence that Jennifer Lawrence is the freakin' best, now there's this: The "Hunger Games" star stepped off the red carpet at Monday's "Catching Fire" world premiere in London ... to hug a crying fan. The not-made-for-TV moment just happened to be captured by Yahoo cameras, eonline.com reports. Now we're definitely inviting her over for Friendsgiving.

Nicks of time

Talk about a cool guest star! Stevie Nicks will appear on "American Horror Story: Coven" this season, co-creator Ryan Murphy tweeted Tuesday. Music by Nicks and Fleetwood Mac has been used on the FX show this season. No date for her appearance has been set.

Big-screen Tupac

We still don't know who will play Tupac Shakur, but we do know a biopic about the slain rapper's life will start production in the spring, thr.com reports. The movie has been in the works for about three years.

ON THE VERGE

Oh hey there, dystopian Chicago!

The city's futuristic skyline appears in the new movie poster for "Divergent." Oh, the stars of the Chicago-filmed flick, Shailene Woodley and Theo James, also appear, but whatever. While you're waiting for next year's release, visit youtube.com/summitscreeningroom to see the new trailer when it is unveiled Wednesday morning.

“Being cool is about keeping your blood pressure steady. So no. Don't be cool. Be passionate. Be dedicated. Be tenacious.”

—Justin Timberlake, to GQ in his cover story for the magazine's annual men of the year issue
